

Participant information sheet

This document describes the study “State or Market? Survey of preferences for financing biological diversity in Sweden”, its aims, and how the data from this survey will be used in academic work. This document thereby elaborates on what you can expect as a respondent in our survey.

This project was approved by Etikprövningsmyndigheten on 2025-10-10 and has the ID 2025-04420-01.

Why would we like you to participate in this study?

This study seeks to improve academic knowledge and policy decisions on how to finance biodiversity conservation and restoration. One of the challenges for halting biodiversity loss is to find the economic resources for restoration and conservation efforts. One of the main aims of this study is therefore to get a better sense of some of the financing options that Swedish citizens are in favour of. The findings from the study will be published in peer-reviewed academic publications and a policy brief.

This project aims to get approximately 2000 responses from residents in Sweden. We aim collect responses that are representative for the Swedish population in terms of income, age, education, gender, and geographical distribution.

Does this project involve any risks for you?

There are no risks to you when participating in this study. Your participation is voluntary, and you can discontinue the survey if you at any point feel uncomfortable.

How will we manage your answers?

All your responses will be fully anonymized before the researchers receive, analyze, or publish them. We, the researchers, also do not have access to any other data about you than the answers you provide in this survey. Once we have completed our analysis, we intent to publish the anonymized data online to increase the transparency of our work. Again, this data will be fully anonymized, which secures that your answers to our survey will not be identifiable.
